

Szanto 5002 200 Meter Dive Watch Review

07 October 2014 By nzomatrix

Szanto is a new collection of vintage inspired timepieces. Szanto was created by Luminox founder Barry Cohen and offers something different from Luminox. The company is bringing vintage inspired watches with modern sizes.

The Szanto watch comes in a cool vintage inspired box that looks like an old trunk. The watch box looks different from any other companies and you will instantly know you own a Szanto watch.

The Szanto 5002 200 Meter Dive Watch has an over-sized 47mm case and 51mm with crown.

This watch is not for those with very small wrists. It is a large watch that is big and bold with vintage appeal. The case has an Ion plated titanium plating with brushed finish. So far I have had no problems with the Hardened and durable mineral crystal that has held up well to abuse. The watch is 15mm thickness making the dive watch a large and sizable watch. The dive watch comes on a silicone/rubber strap that is perfect for a dive watch.

The Szanto 5002 200 Meter Dive Watch has 200M water resistance. The watch should have no problems with rain, showers, swimming, and recreational diving. The watch is powered by Japanese quartz three hand and date movement. The 5002 divers comes equipped with a PVD coated 90 click unidirectional bezel with 15 minute countdown. The lume on the hour markers and hands is quite good and made possible with the C1 Superluminova.

The Szanto 5002 200 Meter Dive Watch is an amazing value for an under $300 dive watch. Those that prefer Quartz to Mechanical will appreciate the precise Japanese movement. If you are looking for a great dive watch that is large and fashionable then the Szanto dive watch is for you.
